GETTING DOWN TO BUSINESS in LOYOLA'S EVENING DIVISION

The Faculty of Commerce in the Evening Division at Loyola is geared to meet the demands of each individual student enrolled. Courses and programs of study are designed to suit the widest possible range of tastes, needs and interests.

Complete degree programs are available in the Evening Division, with majors being offered in Accountancy, Business Administration, Computer Science and Economics. Joint majors are also available in either Accountancy or Business Administration and Computer Science.

The Loyola Commerce Faculty is also recognized by professional organizations such as the Institute of Chartered Accountants, the Certified General Accountants' Association, the Society of Industrial Accountants and the Institute of Canadian Bankers, all of which allow students to apply courses completed at Loyola towards their own programs of study. However, due to the specialized nature of the programs offered by the above-mentioned organizations, it is always best to consult with the professional society one wishes to become a member of, before enrolling in a university program.

In addition to the regular, university degree programs, the Faculty of Commerce in the Evening Division also offers diploma programs in Accountancy, Business Administration, Computer Science, Economics, Industrial Relations and Quality Control. This allows the evening student to obtain a certificate of proficiency in his chosen field of endeavor, while only completing those courses which relate directly to the skill he wishes to acquire.

If, however, the student who has successfully completed the diploma program decides to continue on towards a Bachelor of Commerce degree, he may do so without having to begin all over again from "point A". Since all courses offered as part of the diploma program of study are taken from the university curriculum, they are directly applicable towards the B.Comm course requirements.

And, with small classes, interested professors who are always willing to spend time providing guidance where needed and a tranquil, easily accessible, west-end location, the environment at Loyola is conducive to learning.
